Thank you for joining us for our final show of our 26th season; a year filled with hope, humor and Exile’s signature grit. As in life, most of our characters this season intend to do the right thing. But as witnesses, we can feel the harm that is caused when their blinders hide the impact that their selfish actions can have on others. Their stories illuminate our failings and our strengths; helping us find our own pathway to redemption and hope.

COVID caused a two-year delay in bringing this script to life. Finally, last year Abandon was part of Studio X-hibition, our new play development program. And now we are so proud produce the latest world premiere by Pulitzer Prize winning playwright, and South Philadelphia resident, James Ijames. James has created an Exile show filled with grit and passion. Continuing with the season’s theme, the characters in Abandon are trying to survive and create family. Even with the best of intentions, no one quite figures out how to do it right the first time. And when a light does shine, it shows us that the path to a peace is often a rocky road.

Thank you for choosing live theater. Nothing touches me more than sitting in a room with you, feeling the humanity that only live theater can evoke. I truly believe that no other art form helps facilitate empathy better than theater; and empathy is the healing balm to the divisiveness in this tenuous time. I hope that you will encourage others to experience the transformative power of live performance.

Thank you for joining us as we all emerge from Exile.

Sincerely,

Deborah Block, Producing Artistic Director
